INTRODUCTION / ABOUT THIS EDITION

Whistleblowers, informers, rats, betrayers — these are different names for persons who disclosed information about corruption, abuse of power, human rights violation and other information about harm or threat to the public interest. The prevalence of a particular name in a particular society depends on its respect for whistleblowers.

Acknowledgement of the need to provide legal safeguards for whistleblower protection, as well as respect instead of neglect, indicate the level of moral maturity of the society.

Ukraine has achieved some progress in this direction, as despite the absence of a separate law on whistleblower protection, the right of such people to adequate protection (e.g., Art. 11 of the Law of Ukraine 'On Access to Public Information', Art. 53 of the Law of Ukraine 'On Prevention of Corruption') was acknowledged.

However, awareness of the fact, that in Ukraine there is no proper legal basis for whistleblower protection, gave the 'Ukrainian League of Lawyers against Corruption' an idea to invite representatives of other NGOs: Blueprint for Free Speech, Media Law Institute, Anticorruption Center and UA Center — to create a coalition 'Initiative 11' in order to develop a bill on whistleblower protection and campaign in its support.

Thus, joint efforts of civil society and people's deputies of Ukraine resulted into the bill No. 4038a 'On Whistleblower Protection and Disclosure of Information about Harm or Threat to the Public Interest', which is based on the best standards of whistleblower protection that exist in the world today.

Since the beginning of the public discussion of the bill, the most popular question from international actors is the request to go through the bill in English, while representatives of Ukrainian NGOs and the academic community are interested in learning more about the concept and best international practices of whistleblower protection.

Therefore, we came up with an idea to create a bilingual edition that will include the English translation of the bill No. 4038a 'On Whistleblower Protection and Disclosure of Information about Harm or Threat to the Public Interest' and the Ukrainian translation of Blueprint Principles for Whistleblower Protection, which accumulate the best practices and guiding principles for whistleblower protection, as well as an article dedicated to the concept of whistleblower protection and why we should prioritize it as a part of the sweeping anti-corruption reforms, article, that reveals the legal concept of the institute of whistleblower protection and explains the necessity of legal protection of whistleblowers in Ukraine.

This publication is a joint project of the International NGO 'Blue Print for Free Speech' and the NGO 'Ukrainian League of Lawyers against Corruption', which was made possible by the National Endowment for Democracy (NED, the USA).

Prof. Olena Shostko,

Chairperson of the NGO 'Ukrainian League of Lawyers for Corruption Combating'

LEGAL PROTECTION OF WHISTLEBLOWERS: INTERNATIONAL EXPERIENCE AND RELEVANCE FOR UKRAINE

The ideology and sense of any constitutional state lie in limiting personal and state power and building a state on the basis of the rule of law. Moreover, state administration in any state is a bureaucratic mechanism, a system, operating on the basis of the subordination principle and complying with the internal regulations, which constitute a basis for relationships between subordinate employees and management personnel. If the task of a constitution is to make all state authorities and their officials obey the constitutional principles and rules, the main principle, according to which the bureaucracy is built on, is a hierarchical pattern, and accordingly, compliance with the management personnel's orders. Under such circumstances employees, in case of receiving an order, which, in their opinion, violates constitutional provisions, very often face a dilemma — whether to execute the order or to try to appeal it, thus running a risk of losing a job and destroying their career.

Under such circumstances, only insignificant number of employees choose to disclose facts of abuse of power, corruption¹, all others prefer executing orders. In fact, a danger for the constitutional order of Ukraine is hidden in the nature of state government. Thus, there arises a question: what can protect the constitutional order from destruction, if we do not have the opportunity to be aware of what is actually happening in the government, before systemic abuse of power leads to usurpation of power and, subsequently, popular resistance and even uprisings.

Watchmen of the constitutional order are represented by the individuals who disclose information about illegal activities, embezzlement of budgetary funds, abuse of power, bribery etc. in government agencies, local self-governments, as they warn about the risks arising within the state apparatus to human and civil rights and freedoms and the constitutional order as a whole. Professor Vaughn calls official whistleblowing to be an antidote for bureaucratic evil².

It can be stated that nowadays whistleblowers are widely recognized by the society, which is evidenced by: monuments to whistleblowers Snowden, Assange and Manning in Geneva; a demonstration in support of implementation of whistleblower protection in Brussels; the annual international award International Whistleblowing Prize and reward for courage in the USA.

Nevertheless, disclosing information, disclosers (hereinafter referred to as 'whistleblowers') run a serious risk, in particular, there are cases when information disclosure caused reprisal at work (revocation of bonuses and promotion, re-deployment to a lower position, dismissal from work), attempts to bring to civil liability for defamation, victimization, intimidation of the whistleblower and persons related to the whistleblower³, a problem to find a new place of work, and sometimes criminal prosecution of whistleblowers.

Thus, the issue of implementation of whistleblower protection guarantees remains relevant, and more specifically — the issue of legal and institutional guarantees that should be implemented and will be able to create a real, but not just on paper, protection of individuals who disclosed information about abuse of power, corruption or other public interest information⁴.

The United States of America is an absolute leader with regard to a number of whistleblowers and, accordingly, the first country in the world, which ratified laws on whistleblower protection⁵. According to the American Professor R. Vaughn, disclosures made within the period from 1966 to 1978 in the USA, created a more positive character of a whistleblower, and also evoked a wide response among the public, which made the Congress to institute begin reforms in the state administration area, in particular, create legal guarantees for whistleblowers⁶. The case of the New York police officer Frank Serpico, who gave testimony with regard to cases of corruption⁷, as well as with the well-known Watergate scandal and Pentagon Papers⁸ are referred to.

Over the last two decades, more than 30 countries in the world have developed and ratified special laws on protection of such individuals or have incorporated some guarantees of whistleblower protection in the labor, anti-corruption legislation or in codes of ethics for employees⁹. The countries, which ratified special laws on whistleblower protection, include Canada (Public Servants Disclosure Protection Act), Australia (The Commonwealth Public Interest Disclosure Act, 2013), New Zealand (Protection Disclosures Act, 2000), the USA (The Whistleblower Protection Act, 1989, The Intelligence Community Whistleblower Protection Act of 1998, The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, The Whistleblower Protection Enhancement Act of 2012), Japan (Whistleblower Protection Act (Act No. 122 of 2004)), South Africa (Protection Disclosure Act, 2000), Romania (Romanian Whistleblower's Law, 2004), Great Britain (Public Interest Disclosure Act, 1998).

Thus, nowadays there is experience, tools and procedures for whistleblower protection, which can be called a golden standard or the best practices of protection of whistleblowers. In particular, among the reliable guarantees of whistleblower protection are:

- 1) ensuring anonymity for individuals, who report a wrongdoing to institutions, organizations;
- 2) establishment of reliable channels for making a disclosure;
- 3) creation of a special pre-trial procedure for whistleblower rights protection;
- 4) ensuring protection from reprisal at the workplace;
- 5) exemption from liability for making a disclosure;

⁴ Public information is information which is a subject of social interest, and the public's right to know this information outweighs the potential risk of its distribution. In particular, public interest information includes information about threat to the sovereignty of the state, territorial integrity of Ukraine; ensures implementation of constitutional rights, freedoms and obligations; reveals the possibility of human rights violation, deception of the community, harmful ecological and other negative consequences of actions (omissions) of individuals or legal entities etc.

- 6) establishment of the right to disclose to the media, non-governmental organizations, parliamentary committees or commissions etc.;
- 7) establishment of social guarantees in case of dismissal;
- 8) pecuniary reward etc.

Undoubtedly, the degree and mechanisms of implementation of the corresponding standards vary from country to country. However, it remains beyond argument that creation of the real mechanism for whistleblower protection fully depends on the integrity and quality of implementation of the appropriate standards.

In particular, in Prof. Vaughn's opinion, to become an effective instrument of protection, the law on whistleblower protection should give answers to the following questions:

- 1) What persons are protected?
- 2) Are persons who assist in a variety of ways in the disclosure included?
- 3) Are persons who are not employees of the agency or organization that is the target of disclosure protected?
- 4) What disclosures will be protected?
- 5) Will it protect only violations of law or of particular laws or will it protect broader categories of misconduct?
- 6) Must the information come to whistleblowers' attention as part of their employment or can it come to their attention in other ways?
- 7) Must the disclosures be factual or will a degree of opinion and analysis be included?
- 8) To whom may disclosures be made?
- 9) Are internal disclosures protected?
- 10) Are internal disclosures required?
- 11) Are disclosures to nongovernmental entities, including the media, protected?
- 12) How do these standards protect against reprisals?
- 13) What must be the connection between the protected disclosure and the reprisal?
- 14) What disclosures are prohibited?

15) Who can be charged with reprisal?

16) What government agencies should protect whistleblowers?¹⁰

Besides, the law on whistleblower protection should provide establishment of an independent agency that will consider whistleblower complaints and investigate facts of reprisal of whistleblowers caused by the disclosure.

So, to what extent does the Ukrainian legislation create a reliable legal basis for whistleblower protection?

The constitutional and legal basis for creation of legal guarantees for whistleblowers protection is represented in Article 60 of the Constitution of Ukraine, according to which 'no one is obliged to execute obviously criminal orders or regulations'.

Separate provisions with regard to protection of whistleblowers, who disclosed information about acts of corruption, that are stated in the anti-corruption legislation, in particular, in the Law of Ukraine 'On Prevention of Corruption', and Article 11 of the Law of Ukraine 'On Access to Public Information' and Article 29 of the Law of Ukraine 'On Information' provide whistleblower exemption from liability for disclosure of classified information.

However, the above listed provisions are not enough for whistleblower protection, as to a greater extent the provisions have a declarative rather than a procedural nature. Moreover, the Law of Ukraine 'On Prevention of Corruption' concerns only whistleblowers, who disclosed information about acts of corruption. At the same time, whistleblowing is a reliable tool for not only combating corruption in Ukraine, but also for overcoming violation of human rights by law enforcement bodies, ensuring environmental safety and openness of government agencies, freedom of expression and the constitutional order of Ukraine as a whole. Thus, there is a need to protect not only individuals who report corruption wrongdoings. On the other hand, the provisions, contained within the information legislation, are not enough, as whistleblower protection is required not only to guarantee openness of government agencies, not only to reveal acts of corruption. In other words, whistleblowing can take place in different areas, so there is also a need to protect persons, who are whistleblowers in very different areas.

In order to achieve real results in protecting whistleblowers, a special comprehensive law, which will create an effective mechanism for protection of not only persons who disclose information about acts of corruption or public information about actions of authorities, but also each and every whistleblower who discloses information about abuse of power, human rights violation, ecologically dangerous emissions into the air, production of drugs or foodstuffs with the use of hazardous substances, acts of corruption etc.

It should be noted, that this is a trend that has dominated the world for the last 15 years. The number of countries, which have already ratified or are working on the development of a separate law on whistleblower protection is growing every year, e. g., Great Britain, Romania, Japan, the Republic of South Africa, Australia, Serbia, Kosovo, Latvia. We are sure that only with the existence of a similar comprehensive law in Ukraine we can speak about creation of a reliable legal mechanism of Ukrainian whistleblower protection.

With the purpose of developing an effective draft law on whistleblower protection, the 'Ukrainian League of Lawyers for Corruption Combating', Blueprint for Free Speech, Centre for Democracy and Rule of Law, Anti-Corruption Action Centre and Center UA united to form the initiative group 'Initiative 11'.

The best Ukrainian and international experts were involved in the development of the draft law, which was extensively discussed by the representatives of public organizations, academic community, businessmen, journalists and received a positive evaluation from more than 30 Ukrainian and international experts.

On October 5, 2016 the Anti-Corruption Committee of the Verkhovna Rada of Ukraine made a decision on compliance of the Draft Law No. 4038a 'On Whistleblower Protection and Disclosure of Information about Harm or Threat to the Public Interest' with the requirements of the anti-corruption legislation and recommended to the Verkhovna Rada of Ukraine to take the draft law as a basis on the results of consideration (on first reading).

We hope that in a year the draft law will become the law in which guarantees, which are contained in the current version of the draft law, will be preserved, as in view of complex political and legal reforms, which will facilitate formation of the constitutional order in Ukraine and overcoming negative consequences of the last years, the Draft Law No. 4038a 'On Whistleblower Protection and Disclosure of Information about Harm or Threat to the Public Interest' will become an important tool, which will have a positive impact on ensuring freedom of expression, open government, and hence, strengthening of the constitutional order of the state.

A. INTRODUCTION

Whistleblowing is one of the most effective means of exposing and combating corruption and serious wrongdoing in a society. In order to maximise these benefits, comprehensive laws must be in place to provide whistleblowers with reliable avenues to disclose and mechanisms to protect them from retaliation.

Whistleblower protection is one of the most dynamic issues within the fields of anti-corruption and human rights. Since many countries throughout the world are considering new or improved whistleblower protection laws, it is essential for these laws to include complete protection frameworks for employees and citizens who report misconduct.

Presented here are 23 fundamental principles that should be included in any whistleblower protection law. These principles are designed to help ensure that:

- Information in the public interest reaches the public domain;
- Whistleblowers are protected from all forms of retaliation, including civil and criminal liability;
- Disclosures lead to corrective action and policy reforms; and
- Offenders are brought to justice.

These principles are based on research by international and regional organisations, academic institutions, civil society organisations, and experts in the areas of freedom of speech and human rights. They are shaped by practical experience in all regions and guided by an evidence-based analytical approach.

The aim is to achieve the best possible outcome to ensure the protection of whistleblowers for the ultimate goal of ensuring that information of public interest reaches in the public domain.

Blueprint for Free Speech is an internationally focused, not-for-profit organisation concentrating on research into freedom of speech, transparency, anti-corruption and technology. Our areas of research include public interest disclosure (whistleblowing), freedom of speech, defamation, censorship, right to publish, shield laws, media law, internet freedom, intellectual property and freedom of information.

B. PRINCIPLES

1. Broad coverage of organisations

Principle

There must be comprehensive coverage of organisations in the public sector, the private sector and the so-called 'third-sector' which includes not-for-profit organisations, charities, associations, volunteer groups and community groups. There must be few or no 'carve-outs' where sectors or industries are not covered, such as exemptions for intelligence agencies or the military.

2. Broad definition of reportable wrongdoing

Principle

A law must contain a broad definition of reportable wrongdoing that harms or threatens the public interest (including corruption, criminal misconduct, dangers to public health and safety, fraud, financial misconduct and other legal, regulatory and ethical breaches).

3. Broad definition of a 'whistleblower'

Principle

A law must contain a broad definition of a "whistleblower" whose disclosure is to be protected. This should include employees, contractors, volunteers, future or past employees, interns and other insiders. The protections must also apply to a person who assists others with a disclosure, and any person wrongly identified as a whistleblower.

4. Range of internal reporting channels

Principle

A law must provide for a full range of internal (organisational) reporting channels. This must include encouraging whistleblower policies that put in place mechanisms within organisations such as dedicated channels, review processes and an internal disclosure officer in each organisation. This would also be strengthened by compulsory requirements for having and communicating internal disclosure procedures and by having regular external reviews of the timely progress of these disclosures.

5. Range of regulatory reporting channels

Principle

A law must provide for a full range of regulatory reporting channels including both independent avenues (such as an ombudsman), and channels that are internal to an organisation or department.

6. Range of external (third-party / media) reporting channels

Principle

A law must ensure that protection extends to disclosures made publicly or to third parties (external disclosures) including disclosures to the media, NGOs, labour unions, members of parliament, in circumstances that are clearly explained. There must also be protections for external disclosures in case of immediate threats, such as those to the environment, public health and safety, or where serious criminal acts have been committed.

7. Thresholds for protection

Principle

A law must include workable thresholds for protection, such as an honest and reasonable belief of wrongdoing, including protection for “honest mistakes”. However, there should be no protection for knowingly or recklessly making false disclosures of information.

8. Provision and protections for anonymous reporting

Principle

Protections for whistleblowers must extend to disclosures made anonymously by ensuring that a discloser (a) has the opportunity to report anonymously and (b) is protected if later identified. This should include practical requirements such as dedicated and secure letter drop boxes, telephone lines and electronic anonymity. The identity of a whistleblower should not be revealed without their express consent.

9. Compulsory requirement for internal disclosure procedures

Principle

A law must include comprehensive requirements for organisations (all government institutions; private companies over a certain size) to have internal disclosure procedures.

These should include requirements to establish reporting channels, to have internal investigation procedures, and to have procedures for supporting and protecting internal whistleblowers from point of disclosure. They should also include education programs promoting the existence of these procedures.

10. Broad retaliation protections

Principle

A law must include protections that apply to a wide range of retaliatory actions and detrimental outcomes. These must include but not be limited to protection from dismissal, direct reprisals, adverse employment action, involuntary transfer, reduction of duties, vexatious prosecution, abuse of internal disciplinary proceedings and harassment. They should also extend to granting relief from legal liability.

11. Comprehensive remedies for retaliation

Principle

A law must have comprehensive and accessible civil and/or employment remedies for a whistleblower who suffers detrimental action. These should include compensation rights, general damages, punitive damages, injunctive relief and other pre-trial relief including protected status (declaratory) as a 'whistleblower'. Each remedy should carry a realistic burden on employers or any other person committing reprisal to demonstrate the detrimental action was not related to disclosure. Where whistleblowers or their families are in physical danger, they should be entitled to personal protection measures appropriate to ensure their safety.

12. Sanctions for retaliation

Principle

A law must have reasonable civil, criminal, and/or disciplinary sanctions against those responsible for retaliation.

13. Fair hearing

Principle

A law must ensure that a whistleblower is entitled to a fair hearing where they are claiming for any loss suffered as a result of reprisal taken against them. This includes the right to appeal to a higher authority/court, the right to have financial assistance where they so require and steps be taken to ensure that any imbalance between the parties is redressed and acknowledged. A fair trial means full access to a court/tribunal without impediment, and one that is both expedient and inexpensive.

14. Oversight authority

Principle

A law must create appropriate oversight by an independent whistleblower investigation / complaints authority or tribunal. Their functions might include among other things the receipt of disclosures, ensuring compliance with the law, maintenance of data about whistleblowing cases, reporting to the parliament, commencing investigations of their own motion or coordinating with other agencies to investigate wrongdoing.

15. Transparent use of legislation

Principle:

A law must include requirements for transparency and accountability on use of the legislation such as annual public reporting, publication of data on the number of cases, and information on how many were resolved in what time frame. Public reporting data should capture not only the financial costs around reported corruption, but it should also have measurements for other kinds of non-financial wrongdoing revealed by whistleblowing.

16. Waiver of liability

Principle:

The law must provide that a whistleblower is immune from all disciplinary, civil and criminal liability in connection with the disclosure, which might otherwise arise from their conduct. A whistleblower must also have the right to refuse to participate or refuse to comply with an order to participate in any activity they know or suspect to constitute wrongdoing.

17. Whistleblowing and gag orders

Principle

The law should provide that the right to make a public interest disclosure shall supersede all other obligations and that no contract of any kind, including a contract of employment, a contract for services or a contract of any legal settlement can limit or exclude the right to make or discuss a public interest disclosure. No other law or legal instrument can be used to silence a whistleblower's disclosure.

18. National security and intelligence whistleblowing

Principle

The law should allow for all citizens to make a public interest disclosure, irrespective of whether or not the citizen making the disclosure works in the national security, military, law enforcement or intelligence gathering sectors. Whilst provision may be made for the secrecy of certain information including the identity of agents or particularly sensitive information, a whistleblower must be able to make:

- an internal disclosure in any circumstances, with appropriate channels in place (including anonymous channels) for such a disclosure to be made;
- a disclosure to a regulator or the parliament in circumstances where the whistleblower deems it necessary, accounting for the nature of the information and the conduct; and
- a disclosure to a third party or to the media where the circumstances necessitate such a course of action. Necessity might include among other matters endemic wrongdoing or corruption, serious illegal conduct, immediate danger to public health, safety or the environment, or where the whistleblower believes that internal disclosure could lead to the destruction of evidence or a threat to personal safety.

19. Extradition

Principle

A law should provide that a court may order that a whistleblower is not to be extradited to another country if the extradition is sought on a basis connected to the disclosure. Such a court order must take precedence. In considering such an application, a court must give consideration to:

- the degree of connection between the disclosure and the conduct or circumstances that gives rise to the request for extradition; and
- whether extradition is necessary in all of the circumstances, taking into account the public interest in protecting whistleblowers, and on-going public confidence in these protections.

20. Financial rewards

Principle

In addition to compensation for retaliation, the law might include (together rather than instead of) pecuniary reward mechanisms to reward whistleblowers that come forward in the public interest. The percentage is to be determined based on the local context. An alternative or additional incentive would be to pay a percentage of recoverable monies or fines paid in such an action into a legal assistance fund to support future whistleblowing cases.

21. Whistleblower involvement

Principle

A law should ensure that a whistleblower who has provided information in the public interest should be kept informed of the status of their disclosure, any investigation arising from the material and the result of that investigation. They should also be able to provide further evidence or clarification where it might be necessary — and have the opportunity to comment on the results of any report or finding.

22. Technological anonymity

Principle

A law should create infrastructure such that a whistleblower can make a disclosure, and monitor a disclosure through a secure online facility that does not reveal their identity.

This law must explicitly punish anyone attempting to tamper with this structure, inclusive of intercepting communications to and from it.

23. Legislative Review

Principle

Whistleblower protection laws should be reviewed at least every four years through an open process involving all relevant stakeholders including whistleblowers, interest groups, academics, civil society, the commercial sector and any other interested party.

THE LAW OF UKRAINE

“ON WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION AND DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION ABOUT HARM AND THREAT TO THE PUBLIC INTEREST”

The law defines organizational and legal grounds for disclosures of information about harm or threat to the public interests, and the rights to, guarantee of, and mechanisms of, whistleblower protection.

Chapter I. GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 1. Definitions of Terms

1. In the Law these terms have the following meanings:
 - 1) a whistleblower — is an individual who, having a reasonable belief that the information is reliable, has disclosed, reported or made an attempt proved by real actions to report a wrongdoing that harms or threatens the public interest, if such information has become known to him/her in connection with his/her employment, professional, economic, social or scientific activity, while doing military service or professional training, or through his/her participation in the procedures provided by the law that are obligatory for the beginning of such an activity, military service or professional training.
 - 2) information about harm or threat to the public interest — is information about:
 - human rights violations;
 - criminal offences, including those pending prosecution;
 - accidents, disasters, natural hazards and other emergencies that have occurred or the danger of which really arose;

- food products and household items or threat of their quality loss, which represent potential risks to human life and health;
 - corruption-related administrative wrongdoings;
 - disciplinary wrongdoings, other administrative wrongdoings or any other action or omission of government agencies, holders of public authority or their employees, legal entities, their officers or officials and employees, private individuals who inflicted damage to the constitutional system of Ukraine, life, human health and human safety, the environment, peace and security of humanity, or who created or caused a real threat of such damage;
- 3) holders of public authority — are government agencies, public bodies, agencies of the Autonomous Republic of Crimea, municipalities, local self-governments and other institutions that perform power management functions and whose decisions are binding;
 - 4) family members:
 - a) persons who have mutual rights and obligations (except persons whose mutual rights and obligations are not connected with family relations), share a household, but refrain from entering into marriage or living together, are connected by domestic life and have mutual rights and obligations (except family relations), including persons who live together but are not married;
 - b) Regardless of the terms referred to in subparagraph “a” of this paragraph the spouse, children (including adult children), parents, grandparents, brothers and sisters, adoptive parents, adopted children, guardians, caretakers, or persons under their guardianship.

Article 2. The Main Objectives and Scope of the Law

1. The objectives of the Law include ensuring transparency, openness and accountability of government agencies, timely detection and prevention of any action or omission that represents harm or threat to the public interest, including corruption and other wrongdoings, effective enforcement of whistleblower rights and effective whistleblower protection, affirmation of freedom of media and the protection of freedom of speech.

2. This Law applies to whistleblowers of information about criminal offences and wrongdoings which are not regulated by the Law of Ukraine “On Provision of Security to Persons Involved in Criminal Proceedings.”

The rights and guarantees of whistleblower protection under Articles 11–14, 16 of this Law apply to journalists and other persons who contributed to, facilitated or assisted in the disclosure of information about harm or threat to the public interest, in particular, by providing the whistleblower with shelter, or technical, financial and informational support in his disclosure of the corresponding information.

The right to information under Article 17 of the Law also extends to journalists who participate in public interest disclosures.

3. The rights and guarantees of whistleblower protection provided by the Law do not apply to persons who:

- disclosed or made an attempt to disclose classified information in the public interest, information about harm or threat to the public interest in violation of the provisions of Article 9 of the Law, and also persons who contributed to, facilitated or assisted in such a disclosure;
- informed, disclosed or made an attempt to inform or disclose public interest information to government officials of foreign countries and their representatives.

Chapter II. DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

Article 3. Disclosure Facilitation

1. The state should facilitate and encourage disclosures in the public interest.
2. Holders of public authority, legal entities of public and private law and individual entrepreneurs should create conditions for the disclosures in the public of information about harm or threat to the public interest through:
 - 1) The implementation of encouragement mechanisms and imparting a culture of disclosing information about harm or threat to the public interest among their employees and individuals working for their benefit, doing military service or having professional training;
 - 2) Providing their employees and individuals working for their benefit, doing military service or having professional training with medical care and consultations as to public interest disclosures and whistleblower protection.
3. Holders of public authority and other legal entities referred to in part 2 under Article 5 of the Law should also ensure the creation of conditions for reporting wrongdoings that harm or threaten the public interest through:
 - 1) the adoption and establishment of internal procedures and mechanisms to ensure reporting of wrongdoings that harm or threaten the public interest, disclosure of information about harm or threat to the public interest and an adequate response to it; verification inspection and investigation of the information obtained through disclosure.
 - 2) keeping a separate record of disclosures about harm or threat to the public interest, results of examination and investigation of the information disclosed by whistleblowers, its verification and investigation.

Article 4. Reporting Channels for Disclosures in the Public Interest

1. In order to obtain from whistleblowers information on wrongdoings that harm or threaten the public interest, special internal and external information disclosure
